Foreword

To achieve the Sustainable Development Goals, we need to transform how we use planetary resources, generate economic growth and do business. The exclusive pursuit of short-term profit is incompatible with the promise to realize sustainable and inclusive development for all people, everywhere, on a healthy planet.

The foundation for implementing the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development is public finance. Yet, given the huge investments needed, public finance alone will not suffice. To achieve the Sustainable Development Goals, the private sector needs to step up.

There are positive signs. Two in three institutional investors now pay at least some attention to sustainability in investment decisions, and assets under management in environmental, social and governance funds have risen to US$ 1.8 trillion. Nonetheless, there is a significant shortfall in investments required to implement the 2030 Agenda. Funds are not flowing to where they are most needed and progress to close the financing gap is too slow and uneven.

We need bold action by private sector trailblazers who share a commitment to transforming how we do business. As part of my Roadmap for Financing the 2030 Agenda, I have convened the Global Investors for Sustainable Development Alliance, a diverse group of leaders from business and finance from across the globe. Their task is to identify and implement solutions within their businesses and industry that will unlock long-term financing for the Sustainable Development Goals and facilitate a movement away from the current focus on short-term returns.

As we work together to achieve the Sustainable Development Goals, this is an investment we all must make.

António Guterres
United Nations Secretary-General

“The exclusive pursuit of short-term profit is incompatible with the promise to realize sustainable and inclusive development for all people, everywhere, on a healthy planet.”

ABOUT

In the four years since 2015, when the 17 Sustainable Development Goals were adopted by all United Nations Member States, it has become widely accepted that achieving their aims – ending poverty, improving health and education, reducing inequality, tackling climate change, preserving the environment and spurring economic growth – will be indispensable to securing a lasting and viable future for the earth and its peoples.

The Secretary-General's launch of the Global Investors for Sustainable Development (GISD) Alliance comes just weeks after the 74th General Assembly concludes the High Level Dialogue on Financing for Sustainable Development, the SDG Summit and the Climate Summit, all of which emphasized the urgency in scaling up actions to achieve the SDGs. From extremes in temperatures, to melting arctic ice, to widening inequality, it has become abundantly clear that reaching the goals and targets outlined in the 2030 Agenda is the best hope of ensuring that the world has a future where environmental degradation is halted and reversed, conflicts are averted, and all peoples have the health, education, security and stability they need for continued survival.

Even ahead of the adoption of the SDGs, the leaders of the world understood that they could only be achieved with a considerable scaling-up of finance and investment, both from governments and from the private sector. The Addis Ababa Action Agenda on Financing for Sustainable Development, which provides a global framework for financing the SDGs, affirmed that significant investment from the private sector would be essential. It was clear that barriers to long-term investment from the private sector, be they regulatory or internal to corporations, must be removed in order to align investments and business operations with the SDGs.

The GISD Alliance is a vital part of implementing the Secretary-General's Strategy for Financing the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development. This group of high-level private sector leaders, drawn from all over the globe, is a first of its kind in the United Nations. The members of the Alliance, representing different sectors of the investment landscape, will work together, harnessing their insights as private sector leaders, to advise on removing impediments and implementing solutions for scaling up long-term investment for sustainable development. Members include institutional investors, banks, manufacturing corporations and technology service providers.

The task of financing sustainable development and achieving the 2030 Agenda is not going to be easy. Estimated funding required is significant, rising to trillions of dollars per year in health, education, climate action and infrastructure – power, telecommunications, transport, and water and sanitation. In Asia-Pacific alone, some $1.5 trillion per year will be needed in these areas. While the public sector has a critical role to play in many areas, private investment and finance will be indispensable. Most of this investment will need to be long-term. For example, infrastructure investment needs are on average over 20 years. Without a long-term perspective, certain risks - such as those related to climate change - will not be priced into decision-making.

The GISD Alliance will bring leadership, influence and specific expertise to bear in the struggle to establish systems, policies and a reward structure which will favour long-term investment in a shared future.

FAST FACTS

- The GISD Alliance is a group of high-powered business leaders from all over the world who have responded to the Secretary-General's invitation to come together to provide decisive leadership in mobilizing resources for sustainable development.
 - The Alliance is comprised of 30 recognized leaders of major financial institutions, manufacturing corporations and technology service providers spanning all regions of the world.
 - The Alliance will work on aligning business operations, finance and investment with the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development.
 - The cross-sector grouping of the Alliance reflects the fact that the supply of finance and investment by a diverse range of players is ultimately interconnected. For example, there has been an expanding role of financial actors in corporate decision-making and ownership, as well as an increase in financial activities of non-financial corporations.
- The business leaders in GISD recognize the inherent value of taking a long-term approach to investment decisions and that this can be best achieved if competing businesses come together to address the impediments. They also accept that the continued success of their businesses is inseparable from the underlying economic, environmental, social and governance conditions that support a well-functioning global economy.

■ The Alliance has a two-year timeline – from October 2019 to October 2021. A Strategy Group appointed by the CEOs will facilitate solutions relating to:

- increasing the available supply of long-term investment for sustainable development;
- realizing SDG investment opportunities in developing countries;
- enhancing the impact of private investment on sustainable development.

■ The Alliance will consult widely with experts, broader industry representatives and policy makers, and propose deliverables at three levels:

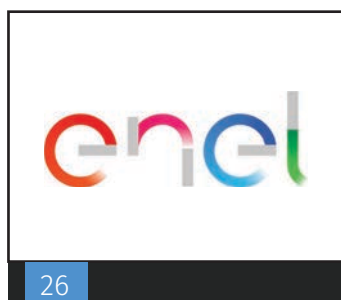

- within individual firms;
- within respective industries;
- through system-wide policy and regulatory change.

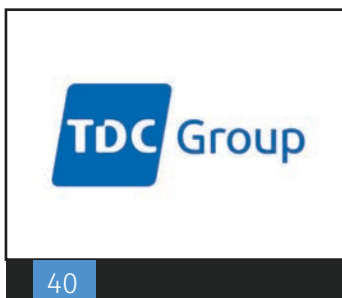

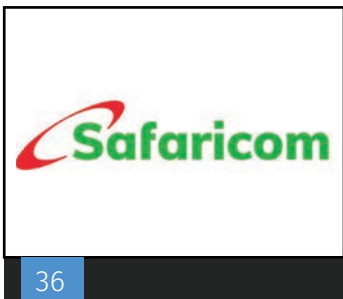

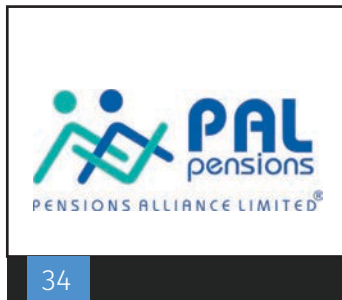

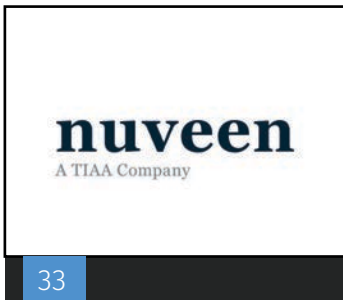

■ The GISD Alliance will foster the implementation of identified solutions within their respective industries and with regulatory, standard setting and other influential bodies.

- This will stimulate coordinated actions by private actors, governments, regulatory bodies and multilateral institutions.
- The Secretary-General will highlight and promote GISD's recommendations in relevant high-level policy making forums.

■ GISD's work will be supported by United Nations system partners (the Department of Economic and Social Affairs, UNCTAD, Global Compact, Principles for Responsible Investment, UNEP-FI, UNDP, UNCDF and the Regional Commissions) and others like the World Bank Group.
